

Dear Ms. Bransen-

I am in favor of complete streets. Implementing complete streets will help encourage people out of their cars, something sorely needed in the face of climate changes and obesity rates. Complete streets will benefit the health of both our planet and all of us who inhabit it.

As the Associate Deputy Director of the California Transportation Commission I thought you would want to know there are plenty of us who support including Complete Streets within the Regional Transportation Plan guidelines.

I got involved in transportation issues after observing one of my son's classmates get hit by a commuter van, after his father double parked across the street from the school and dropped him off. We continue our struggle to make Berkeley more walkable and bikable, but policy and implementation guidelines from the CTC would surely help.
